Project Learning from data 2024

Assignment group functioning: Group part

Group: 4

1. Compare the individual perspectives.

- Look at the differences in your assessment and those of your team members on the questionnaire, the time spent on the project and the peer feedback.
- Try to explain any significant differences between perspectives.
- Discuss the different perspectives with the team to solicit ideas about what may have led to the different assessments and Explain what you, as a group, have done to resolve the differences.

Write a short report on these different perspectives and the ideas you have about this (max. one page)

Everyone has a different perspective, and coming from various academic backgrounds, all of us contributed unique input to the project. We discussed this with the entire team and devised our initial SAP plan accordingly. Some members reported a lack of communication, while there were a few instances with occasional mismatches of roles. After our presentation, we realised that time spent on the project was not effective enough. The members are on different topics because of the different study progress in the course lectures. The differences were caused by different work styles, communication gaps, and expectations. Furthermore, some members expected to work on the project remotely while some members wished to work on campus. Several peers noted the project management and presentation could have been more streamlined with clearer ideas and timelines. Peers particularly appreciated the contribution to the SAP critical phases and our group's ability to synthesise a clearer view. We need to put more effort into technical topics used in an SAP report and enhance our overall grasp of the subject. Lastly, by comparing these perspectives, we gain valuable insights into our strengths and areas for growth. The varied assessments and feedback will be instrumental in refining our approaches and enhancing our overall project effectiveness.

2. Bundle the individual and group assignments and post this on blackboard
