2. Additional reflection

Select at least one of the following items to reflect on:

Did the team members exhibit good listening and speaking practices? How did their actions and behavior impact the discussion in a good or bad way?

The team did a great job of listening to each other and speaking clearly. They were really focused on what everyone had to say, which helped to create a positive and supportive atmosphere.
While most team members were good at expressing their ideas, a few could improve on this.
By being open to different ideas, the team was able to solve problems and come up with creative solutions. This positive approach was a big factor in the project's success.

3. Time spent on the project

Is the number of theoretical hours allocated to this project enough to meet the group and course objectives? Give an estimation of time spent so far.

"Certainly, the allotted time for this project was sufficient to meet both group and course objectives. Approximately 75-80 hours were invested in its completion."

4. Peer feedback

Grade yourself and your group members from 0 tot 10 for the work you have done so far, explain why you give this score and give some tips for improvement.

Name	Score (out of 10)	Explanation	Tips for Improvement

2. Additional reflection

Select at least one of the following items to reflect on:

- What was the level of preparation of the team members? Was there anyone that impressed you or was especially influential or persuasive? What did they do that was impactful or effective?
- Did the team members exhibit good listening and speaking practices? How did their actions and behavior impact the discussion in a good or bad way?
- Consider a conflict resolution or negotiation situation you have with your team. What is the issue? Was it resolved in an acceptable way? If so, what are the keys? If not, what are the challenges and where does the struggle occur?

- Due to the group's size of eight, disagreements over topics can occasionally arise because various members have differing opinions. In that scenario, we collaborate and develop a more effective solution. We pay close attention to what everyone has to say, and then we work to find a solution that works for everyone on the team.

3. Time spent on the project

Is the number of theoretical hours allocated to this project enough to meet the group and course objectives? Give an estimation of time spent so far.

We have several courses in between the project, so it's difficult to sit together, as we are 8 members of the group, and everyone has some work.

I personally sit with the group for approximately 50 hours.

2. Additional reflection

Select at least one of the following items to reflect on:

- What was the level of preparation of the team members? Was there anyone that impressed you or was especially influential or persuasive? What did they do that was impactful or effective?

  The team members displayed varying levels of preparation. Some members had clearly done thorough research and brought insightful ideas to the discussion, while others seemed less prepared or relied on others to lead the conversation.

- Did the team members exhibit good listening and speaking practices? How did their actions and behavior impact the discussion in a good or bad way?

  The team generally exhibited good listening and speaking practices, which positively influenced the discussion. Members listened attentively, allowing others to complete their thoughts without interruptions.

- Consider a conflict resolution or negotiation situation you have with your team. What is the issue? Was it resolved in an acceptable way? If so, what are the keys? If not, what are the challenges and where does the struggle occur?

  The team encountered a disagreement regarding the prioritization of tasks. Some members argued for focusing on immediate deadlines, while others wanted to allocate resources to long-term goals. The conflict was resolved in an acceptable way through open dialogue and compromise. The team decided to dedicate a percentage of resources to each priority, ensuring both short-term and long-term goals were addressed.

3. Time spent on the project

Is the number of theoretical hours allocated to this project enough to meet the group and course objectives? Give an estimation of time spent so far.

The estimated time dedicated to the project is 60 hours, which is enough to finish all tasks and meet the goals. This amount of time seems suitable for completing the work and delivering good results.

2. Additional reflection

Select at least one of the following items to reflect on:

- What was the level of preparation of the team members? Was there anyone that impressed you or was especially influential or persuasive? What did they do that was impactful or effective?
- Did the team members exhibit good listening and speaking practices? How did their actions and behavior impact the discussion in a good or bad way?
- Consider a conflict resolution or negotiation situation you have with your team. What is the issue? Was it resolved in an acceptable way? If so, what are the keys? If not, what are the challenges and where does the struggle occur?

- I guess in a group environment, sometimes getting approval on every single decision is difficult unless someone volunteer an opinion. So special attention is needed all the time to make everyone in team feel heard. Sometimes we struggled in this perspective.

3. Time spent on the project

Is the number of theoretical hours allocated to this project enough to meet the group and course objectives? Give an estimation of time spent so far.

- It is a bit tight schedule. 45- 50 hours

4. Peer feedback

Grade yourself and your group members from 0 tot 10 for the work you have done so far, explain why you give this score and give some tips for improvement.

2. Additional reflection

Select at least one of the following items to reflect on:

Did the team members exhibit good listening and speaking practices? How did their actions and behavior impact the discussion in a good or bad way?

- Most of the team showed excellent listening and speaking skills. They paid close attention to each other's ideas and feedback, ensuring all voices were heard. Some members shared their thoughts clearly and politely, creating a positive and cooperative atmosphere, though a few could improve.
- By being open to different opinions, the team solved problems and included a variety of perspectives in our work. This positive attitude and supportive communication greatly contributed to our project's success.

3. Time spent on the project

Is the number of theoretical hours allocated to this project enough to meet the group and course objectives? Give an estimation of time spent so far.

"Yes, the time given for this project was sufficient to meet both group and course goals. We spent about 75-80 hours on it."

Assignment group functioning: Group part

Group: 4

1. Compare the individual perspectives.

- Look at the differences in your assessment and those of your team members on the questionnaire, the time spent on the project and the peer feedback.
- Try to explain any significant differences between perspectives.
- Discuss the different perspectives with the team to solicit ideas about what may have led to the different assessments and Explain what you, as a group, have done to resolve the differences.

Write a short report on these different perspectives and the ideas you have about this (max. one page)

Everyone has a different perspective, and coming from various academic backgrounds, all of us could give unique input to the project. We discussed this with the entire team and devised our initial SAP plan accordingly. Some members reported a lack of communication, while there were a few instances with occasional mismatches of roles. After our presentation, we realised that time spent on the project was not effective enough. The members are on different topics because of the different study progress in the course lectures. The differences were caused by different work styles, communication gaps, and expectations. Furthermore, some members expected to work on the project remotely while some members wished to work on campus. Several peers noted the project management and presentation could have been more streamlined with clearer ideas and timelines. Peers particularly appreciated the contribution to the SAP critical phases and our group's ability to synthesise a clearer view. We need to put more effort into technical topics used in an SAP report and enhance our overall grasp of the subject. Lastly, by comparing these perspectives, we gain valuable insights into our strengths and areas for growth. The varied assessments and feedback will be instrumental in refining our approaches and enhancing our overall project effectiveness.

2. Bundle the individual and group assignments and post this on blackboard

Bundle all the individual parts and the group part of the assignment on group functioning into one single document and post this on blackboard. The deadline is December 14th 2024.

3. Discussion with lecturer

Depending on the need, each group will have a short meeting with the lecturer to discuss this assignment (or teamwork in general) on the 18, 19 or 20 December 2024.
